Finally twitter

You might say I caved in. Not exactly, because I discovered asemic tweeting, which means "having no specific semantic content". To be asemic it shouldn’t be mistaken for dense symbolic conversations or ascii art, or just a normal tweet, but since you can’t make up your own characters and have to use the supported part of unicode you’ll have to rely on people not understanding everything in unicode in the first place to be a bit asemic.
